THEME:

VISION-SUPER-VISION IN GROUP ANALYTIC TRAINING

Someone once said that a supervision group is like an island on a stormy sea. As if all the sociological and political hurricanes that rage around us are not enough, they are ever-present in each member of the supervision group including supervisor. Parallel individual and social processes are intertwined into the matrix of hope which then becomes transformative experience, security, professional development, warm constructivism. But, at the same time, this shaping is making us fragile for any number of reasons... for our vision of supervision, for being supervised, for supervising our supervision, for still not having the slightest idea who or what Skype is... and in the heart of this whirlwind of visions, we keep asking ourselves what is the meaning of "super". Supervision implies particular knowledge based on empirical research to develop certain model of clinical work. Essentially, supervision is based on "practice" and "teaching of the practice". Learning about everyday practical work with patients, application of the clinical work principles through structured, debatable way is the highlight of every supervision. Supervising means overlooking, monitoring someone's work through eyes of experienced clinician, sensitive teacher, professional who can sense the subtle shades during therapy. Supervision is the opportunity to grasp the essence of therapy, as formed by supervisor, and consequently, create this process in current psychotherapy frame. Let us reshape the sentence from the beginning. Let us say that, during these VISION-SUPER-VISION E.G.A.T.I.N. study days, the island is our good will and desire to explore those visions of supervision that strengthen both our personality and our work.
